Cleft constructions have been discussed in a number of languages, but they are always delimited either on the basis of language-specific definitions, or with reference to some degree of formal and functional resemblance with the cleft constructions of English or French. No clear cross-linguistic definition of clefts

Clefts and related focus constructions focus and relative constructions (Schachter 1973) sentence-peripheral foci bind resumptive pronouns without WCO or island effect. This paper investigates a cleft analysis for this type of focus constructions and discusses its typological implications. 0. Introduction In the following discussion I propose a typology of focus and focus constructions
